

Salon Royal

The Salon Royal is known for its Grand Balls, often visited by the Royalty. These occasions offer the High Society ladies and gentlemen to meet with their equals for social intercourse and dancing. Tonight, a new guest nobody has met before visits the Salon. He is René, Count of Luxembourg. The good life-loving Count wants to spend the last night of his short marriage in a joyful company. The Ball is opened by Angéle, an enchanting star singer from Paris who, once again bewitches her audience. René is deeply impressed by the beautiful singer. After her performance, he mingles with the other guests and asks Angéle to dance with him the lively quadrilles and waltzes. While enjoying each other's company, love is slowly creeping into their hearts. However, they hesitate to reveal their feelings for one another, because they are both married – but they are not aware that they are married to each other! Now, their secret wedding took place three months before, under the condition that the bridegroom would not see his bride and know her identity. This marriage of convenience enabled Angéle to abandon her bourgeois past and join the ranks of aristocracy so that, after divorcing the Count three months later, she could marry Prince Basil. This plan suited René, Count of Luxembourg, a playboy and a friend of Prince Basil, well. He was again short of money and entering into the faked marriage with an unknown lady was well rewarded. During the evening, as the both "spouses" find out each other's true identity, some merry confusion begins. Will Angéle remain the Countess of Luxembourg, or will there be celebration of a new wedding to Prince Basil?

The dances to be taught during the course

Quadrilles, couple dances and cotillions in typical 19th century ball choreographies.

Alliance Quadrille for three couples - master Rudolph Voss, discovered in the Berlin 1864, and newly revived by Sylvia in January quadrilles: 1) De l'Anglaise – consists of pretty assemblé step, 2) De l'Allemande – danced Bohémienne – in the polka rhythm, and 4) De assemblé step. A quotation from 1864 described the Alliance Quadrille as "the most graceful piece that the Dance Art has produced in many years, bringing together four older, favourite dance forms of different nations. There is the Anglaise, the Allemande, the Eccosaise (with polka step) and the Française, modernised, shortened, in lively tempo and with elegant rhythm, all bound together in a rich Terpsichorean unity." The music was composed by Mr. Hertel, the composer to the Royal Court of Prussia.

choreographed by the royal dancing illustrated ladies magazine „Bazar“ from 2012. The Alliance is a set of four figures danced with the chassé-jeté-with waltz and Tyrolienne steps, 3) De la Française, again with the chassé-jeté-

The European Quadrille – Quadrille in Carré – devised in 1856-85 on the basis of authentic European sources. While the Alliance Quadrille uses different steps and dance formations popular in the 19th century and ties them together in a graceful unity, the European Quadrille puts stress on the unique dance forms of each individual country – France, Prussia, Italy, Russia, England and, the finale, Austria. The lively music was composed by a well-known Viennese composer M. Ziehrer in 1862 (it has been arranged for orchestra from Ziehrer's original manuscript).

Waltz "Frühlingsboten" (Herald of Spring Waltz) and Polkas in the 19th century

"Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb und Lust" (My Life is Full of Love and Joy) by Josef Strauss, 1869. This charming waltz choreography includes the authentic step variations in turning both clockwise (natural turn) and anti-clockwise (reverse turn), and incorporates these into beautiful cotillion formations – a real treat for every waltz lover.

"Edelreigen" (A. Freising, 1892) together with the entry march from "The Gypsy Baron" (Johann Strauss II)

"March Polonaise Cotillion Potpourri"

Waltzes, polkas, mazurkas, cotillions and parlour games – all these are to be practiced for the Grand Ball Night
